Evening Nicholas

Thank you for your time earlier and for your time preparing the attached, I personally find this really useful at this clearly outlines the biohazard background, concerns from yourself and other parties (especially around vulnerability), then your position and expectations on the contents claim moving forwards.

@Andy @Sarah – I'd welcome your thoughts too, especially if any concerns which could impact the claim from a technical perspective that I may have missed?

Kind regards

Simon

Subject: Contents Position Following Category 3 Sewage Contamination – 1 Riverside Cottages

Dear Simon,

Following our conversation earlier today, I am attaching a short white paper which sets out, in a structured and evidence-led manner, our clear reasons for rejecting any proposal to retain or remediate textiles, footwear, ventilated electrical items, or porous wood and wood-based materials affected by the sewage contamination at 1 Riverside Cottages.

For the avoidance of doubt, this paper deals solely with the contents position. It is intentionally narrow in scope and does not seek to address the wider and more serious failures that have arisen in the handling of this claim.

The contents position set out in the paper has been synthesised following very careful consideration of a substantial body of published research, the independent consultant evidence provided by Dr Vanya Gant, and direct discussions with the insurer's own appointed specialists, including BioResponse. It therefore represents a settled and considered position, rather than an initial or provisional view.

At this stage, what would be particularly helpful is to obtain Lloyds Bank General Insurance's formal position on the contents issues raised, so that a clear and unambiguous line can be drawn on this discrete aspect of the claim.

As discussed earlier today, Danny Chambers MP has confirmed that he will write directly to the CEO within Lloyds. This will represent the first stage of a more concerted escalation. While achieving appropriate redress on the contents position is necessary, it is only one element of a broader set of concerns.

There remain multiple additional heads of failure, including (but not limited to):

- prolonged delay and loss of control following a Category 3 sewage event,
- contractor actions that actively redistributed contamination within the property,
- failures of governance and oversight during remediation, and
- the handling of a clinically vulnerable policyholder in a manner inconsistent with any reasonable duty of care.

Those wider issues will be addressed separately. However, they provide important context as to why clarity on the contents position is now essential.

Had Lloyds Bank General Insurance's actions been left unchecked, the consequences for Louisa—given her well-documented physical and mental vulnerabilities—could have been extremely serious, indeed potentially fatal. The insurer was fully aware of those vulnerabilities, yet the response throughout demonstrated a persistent failure to engage adequately with the risks involved.

Before progressing further, I would appreciate it if you could take a look at the attached white paper and let me know your thoughts. As discussed, the next practical step will be for Andy Lyne to forward the document formally and seek Lloyds Bank General Insurance's position on this issue.

Thank you very much for your time, and I look forward to hearing from you.

Kind regards,

Nicholas Scarr
